

The Journal of High Technology Law (JHTL) was founded in 1998 and became a Suffolk University Law School Honor Board in 2001. JHTL is the official journal of the Intellectual Property Law Concentration, and complements the LL.M. in Global Technology, and the distinguished high technology faculty and student-run organizations.

Recognizing that every area of law is affected by high technology, JHTL covers a broad range of subject matter, including:

- Intellectual Property (Copyright Law, Patent Law, Trademark Law, Trade Secrets)
- Information Technology
- Constitutional Law & the Internet
- Technology in the Court Room
- Cybercrime
- Privacy Rights
- E-Commerce
- Communications & Media Law

A unique feature of JHTL is its ability to publish all articles online, which allows many members to publish their materials while still at Suffolk University Law School. Making articles available on Westlaw, Lexis, and JHTL.org allows members of the legal community direct access to our timely articles, notes, and case comments.

About The Journal of High Technology Law Award for Excellence in IP Law

2009 marks the first year in which the JHTL has recognized a Suffolk University Law School alumnus for excellence in the field of Intellectual Property Law. Mark Solomon, Hiring Partner and Principal at Hamilton Smith Brook Reynolds and President of the Boston Patent Law Association, will be presented with the award by faculty advisors Andrew Beckerman-Rodau and Michael Rustad at the JHTL's annual alumni cocktail reception on March 26, 2009. The cocktail reception is being held to honor Mark's career achievements and to foster the Suffolk University Law School alumni network. The event will also serve to welcome the many distinguished speakers for the following day's Conference on Patent Law and Economics, co-sponsored by Suffolk University Law School's IP Concentration and the JHTL.
